Marcia Rose is the founding teacher of Taos Mountain Sangha. She has been studying and practicing meditation and Western traditions since 1979, primarily in the Vipassana-Theravada (Path of the Elders) tradition. Her own teaching reflects a strong range of teachers including Sayadaw U Pandita, Tukku Aung Rinpoche, and various Western teachers.

Annick Nuyen is the founding teacher of The Mountain Hermitage, which has also served as the virtual home of The Mountain Hermitage for three annual retreats. Vipassana teacher Joseph Goldstein guided meditation for 80 attendees, and in the following question and answer period offered teachings ranging from attunement, knowing, and equanimity to the meaning of love, intimacy, and impermanence. All proceeds benefit The Mountain Hermitage.

Our Vision

The Mountain Hermitage will be a small retreat center dedicated to the inner cultivation and outer manifestation of wisdom, lovingkindness, compassion, and peace.

Our goal is to create a community that promotes diversity among retreatants. In addition to cottages where qualified, experienced Dharma students can devote themselves to intensive meditation practice for two weeks or longer, there will be a wheelchair-accessible cottage and cottages dedicated for practice for monastics, those engaged in social service work, and lay Dharma teachers.

Scholarship aid will be available for those who may not otherwise be able to attend and to promote diversity among retreatants. On Sunday morning a particular area of The Mountain Hermitage will be open to the larger community as a free download from The Mountain Hermitage site www.mountainhermitage.org.

Hermitage to Receive Major Gift, Plans Spring Launch

An anonymous donor’s pledge of approximately $200,000 to support The Mountain Hermitage vision has triggered an earnest search for real estate, reports Hermitage Board President Jean Smith. The pledge monies will be secured in early spring 2008. Properties of 15 to 50 acres no more than half an hour from Taos are being considered. Construction would start with a small teacher house, three or four two-room meditation cottages with shared baths, and a meditation hall that would accommodate 30 yogis.

The Board hopes that this initial pledge will inspire other major gifts to underwrite the projected $1,000,000 cost to bring the above initial stages of the project to completion. (See vision statement, back.)

Joseph Goldstein Offers Benefit Dharma Evening

If your dream was to experience dozens of dharma offerings from a wise and beloved teacher in one short evening, that dream would have come beautifully true on June 8, 2007. In the great hall of San Geronimo Lodge in Taos, NM, which has also served as the virtual home of The Mountain Hermitage for three annual retreats, Vipassana teacher Joseph Goldstein guided meditation for 80 attendees, and in the following question and answer period offered teachings ranging from attunement, knowing, and equanimity to the meaning of love, intimacy, and impermanence. All proceeds benefit The Mountain Hermitage.

In the easy, conversational style for which he is so well known, Joseph spoke of the direct relevance of the Buddha's teachings to our daily lives. His first experience of meditation: “It was an amazing first five minutes,” he said. “For the first time I saw there was a way to look at the mind, instead of looking out at the world through it. When people first get a taste of watching their minds, the discovery is tremendously compelling.”

As he generously shared his own life experiences and anecdotes of his Buddhist journey, listeners took away a treasury of teachings, including:

Calm is a state that is the opposite of resistance. Equanimity is the quality of mind of impartiality. The equanimous mind holds everything, and in that impartiality is the chance to learn.

When you realize the empty or selfless nature of consciousness, the energy to bring about the good of others dawns uncontrollably and effortlessly. When we take ourselves out of the way, what is left is love and compassion.

Real spiritual maturity happens when the relative and ultimate levels of truth are known as expressions of each other. When we understand truth on the ultimate level, we can engage in the world with much greater freedom.

Dear Friends,

I write to you today with a joyful heart. We have just concluded our third and very fine year of offering two-week to month-long meditation retreats for experienced Dharma students. Thanks to the small foundation which has continuously supported the scholarship funds for Hermitage yogis, we have offered substantial scholarship help to many people over these three years. On December 9th we will close out this year with one more offering, an evening of guitar music given as a Benefit for the Hermitage by highly acclaimed guitarist Carl Bernstein.

Thanks to a generous gift the Hermitage will receive in early spring of 2008, we will begin the careful process of moving forward toward finding the right spot here in the Taos, NM, area for manifesting the original vision of The Mountain Hermitage. While this gift will enable us to begin the process, we need your help to complete these important first steps, and then to bring the project to completion.

Please consider joining our widening circle of joy through your own generosity. Together we will build a home for experienced Dharma students to deepen their practice through extended periods of meditation here in the mountains of northern New Mexico.

On behalf of the Hermitage Board, I offer a bow of deep gratitude to all those who have taught and practiced at Hermitage retreats and to all of our donors and supporters. Your participation and help continues to inspire and strengthen us as we work to realize the vision of The Mountain Hermitage. Thank you.

Warmly,

Marcia Rose

~ Reflections on Practice from Marcia Rose ~

Equanimity - Upekkha in the Pali spiritual language (the language that the Buddha’s original teachings were first translated into) is a powerful force in our practice, a powerful force in the whole of our life. It manifests as the equipoise, the balance or equilibrium between the opposing forces in the mind of the desired and the undesired. This equipoise of equanimity offsets the weightiness of greed and aversion. It’s that point of balance in the middle of the see-saw of life.

As equanimity blossoms it shows up in our practice and our lives as fearlessness, great strength, and ease within the mind and heart, keeping us balanced and impartial in the midst of it all. As awakening beings, one way we can practice this essential quality of mind/heart is as one of the Brahma Viharas/Divine Abidings. The classical Theravada phrase used in this form of equanimity practice is this:

“I am/you are the inalienable heir or owner of my/your karma (my/your ‘deeds’ of thought, speech, and bodily actions). My/your happiness or suffering depends upon my/your actions (of thought, speech, and body), not upon my wishes.”

As it is done in the Brahma Vihara practice, one silently repeats this phrase over and over to oneself, staying very present and mindfully aware, but not getting caught or seduced into the stories that may show up. After directing the phrase to yourself for a few days, you can then slowly over time begin to bring in other individuals, such as someone who has been of benefit to you in your life, a dear friend, a family member, and even a difficult person. As you go on with this practice a very natural reflection and understanding will begin to blossom, not through discursive thought but simply through the process of the practice itself and your growing trust in its power.

You might consider trying this practice for 10 or 15 minutes each day, keeping an open mind and heart towards the process and its fruits.

Venerable Sayadaw Vivekananda Offers Rare Retreat Experience

The Vallenitos Mountain Refuge in northern New Mexico was the Shangri La setting for an extraordinary 20-day Vipassana retreat sponsored by The Mountain Hermitage and led by the Venerable Sayadaw Vivekananda from July 6 to July 25, 2007. The deep stillness and pristine beauty of the Refuge invited a deepening mindfulness to every nuance of breathing, walking, and simple daily activities. The retreat, attended by 24 experienced yogis housed in tents, cabins and yurts nestled in the aspen and pine forest, was the final stop on Ven. Vivekananda’s 2007 Western teaching tour. He is the resident teacher at Panditarama Lumbini International Vipassana Meditation Center in Lumbini, Nepal.

Guitarist Carl Bernstein Presents Benefit Concert on December 9

The Mabel Dodge Luhan House in Taos, NM, will host a benefit concert by guitarist Carl Bernstein at 5:00 p.m. on the evening of Sunday, December 9, 2007. Proceeds will benefit The Mountain Hermitage. A professional musician since 18, Carl studied with renowned classical guitarists Julian Bream and Andres Segovia, among others. In addition to his many regular solo classical guitar concert performances, he is currently working with a jazz ensemble and accompanying a variety of singers. Four albums of Bernstein’s music are available, reflecting his diverse repertoire which includes classical, original compositions, improvisation, and popular selections. Dinner discounts for post-concert dining available at a few local restaurants, TBA.

Suggested donation per person is $20 at the door. No one will be turned away for lack of funds.
